Being on Fleek

Pretty a few years later, I nevertheless locate myself wincing while slang is used within the residence! consider my horror while after simply being used to dual communicate (it’s authentic, they have their own language which they use at opportune instances), the girls move as much as secondary faculty and that i go from being on fleek to zero sit back! Slang and jargon seem to be anywhere. From social media structures and songs to tv series and adverts, there's really no getting away from it. As a discern, i've the choice of doing my quality to keep up with “the lingo” or continue to be absolutely clueless and bewildered by the conversations at the dinner desk! As a language instructor, i am debating whether or not this requires a new route on teenager speak and as an assessor i am thinking about on how thrilling it will be as these words clear out through into the applicants’ responses!

Mastering the Slang

Here are a few of the choice ones that made it to the dinner table and were translated for me:

- On Fleek: something which is nearly close to perfection (about the food on the evening dinner table of course)
- to slay: to succeed in doing something amazing (I only heard this once and then banned it from my personal space as it does not conjure up images of anything amazing for me)
- zero chill: to do something very uncool and very not popular (used quite a lot to describe me!)
- FOMO / JOYO: Fear of missing out /joy of missing out (Why can’t they just say the words rather than “I had FOMO”!)
- Salty – the way someone acts when they are upset or irritated (I thought they were describing my food!!)
- to ghost someone: when two people are spending time together and then one of them suddenly disappears (I had visions of Patrick

Swayze and Demi Moore for this one!)

- Sup: What's up? (Ok so this one really gets my goatSUP? I thought that was Stand Up Paddleboard!)

Language of course is not static and keeps on evolving – so should slang become part of the language learners journey or is it sabotaging their road to understanding the English language.

Conclusion

The usage of social media, however in addition they use slang after they speak to friends and once they grasp out. Many younger human beings assume that slang is simpler to apprehend it. But, no longer a few younger humans additionally prefer to use cozy Indonesian while talking to their interlocutor. They count on that if we speak in , it will look polite and they may appreciate and admire each different. So, the lifestyles of slang is indeed very demanding the life. However alternatively, we cannot save you it, mainly amongst youngsters and youth. due to the fact their mental development requires them to be diagnosed in society and one in all them is with the aid of following the trend of slang. consequently, the improvement of slang can't be avoided but can be minimized if we once more boom the lifestyles of the language itself.
